

Alaska Mission Project Update The Kincaid Family

Pictured is the Kobuk River in front of the village of Shungnak. Shungnak is a village of approximately 270 Inupiat Eskimo people and less than ten non-native folks associated with the K-12 school.

This village has been a site for Adventist mission ministry since the late 1960s. But the tenure of our mission personnel has been intermittent at best. For the past almost ten years, Tony and Airen Sherman have given their lives to this village. Sad to say, they are now embarking on a new adventure further from the North American comfort zones. I say sad because they will be sorely missed. A positive thought is with regard to the blessing they will bring to their new assignment in a remote location on the other side of the world.

This brings us to the reality of necessary recruitment of a family to take over the ministry in Shungnak. It is the goal to find a couple who are suited to live in a remote rural arctic environment. And be able to not only survive, but to serve the native people who call this beautiful area home.

The Alaska Conference of Seventh-day Adventist administers the remote native work through a program called Arctic Mission Adventure (AMA). Any potential volunteers should be directed to contact Pastor Tobin Dodge, who is the Director of the conference program.

Adventist World Aviation (AWA) is engaged in a collaborative relationship with the Alaska Conference to provide transportation, and other supportive services as needed or requested.

We take this opportunity to thank our faithful donors. Now is the time to garner resources, and be poised to deliver our services safely and timely.

Please call the AWA office in Canada to set up a recurring donation at 778-753-6564 or in the US, call 919-938-2920. Online, it's just a few simple steps to share your support. We need your prayers daily. Thank you and God bless!

*God bless you all,
Jim and Linda Kincaid*
