

Central America Mission Project Update

DREAMING BIG

In our wildest dreams, we never expected God to send us to the Miskito people of Central America. Still, once with them, we could see how the Holy Spirit was leading our family to share God's love and hope in ways unique to the gifts He has given us. Only now, as we initiate 2025, has God begun to unfold His plans for us to minister to those in the cities, hundreds of kilometers inland from where we had started. While we continue to support outreach efforts by training and equipping local missionaries to the Miskito communities, especially those isolated along the Coco River, personally, we have been physically relocated with a new vision for a new people group.

The strategy, as we have been given to understand, involves opening a clinic to attract people suffering from physical illnesses. As we care for their health needs, we can educate them on how their Creator designed them to experience an abundant life. Connecting people's temporal needs to their Creator also connects them to the supply source for their eternal needs. I can use my gifts as a chiropractor. Glenda is exercising her budding gifts to educate people about natural remedies and lifestyle changes. We pray with our patients in the office after their care and supply them with educational materials on health and spiritual truth, and God is blessing our efforts. The office is rapidly becoming popular, as there is a great need for it, and people are finding genuine relief from their illnesses.

As we began to market our clinic, Glenda was handing out flyers to the pedestrians in the streets. We also put banners in strategic traffic areas that announced our opening and ensured we were listed on Google Maps. We learned of a Christian radio station and decided to advertise with them. However, we were surprised when they asked us if we would consider creating a weekly, hour-long program to educate listeners. I immediately began to sweat nervously, but I couldn't say "No" directly despite my fear because, long ago, I promised God that if He asked me to do anything, I would accept. Glenda seemed more comfortable with the idea, but was this God asking?

One day, we did a half-hour interview on the radio that lasted almost an hour. The idea was to introduce the office, but listeners called in and asked questions during the live interview. We had a great time answering their questions and explaining physiology. Still, we always returned people's attention to their Creator's design and our body's original user manual, the Bible. That hour seemed like only a few minutes! After that experience, we were convinced that, in the near future, a radio program designed to answer people's health questions from the creation viewpoint will be added to our outreach strategy.

Through friends and acquaintances, we have also been invited to multiple churches to share specific health topics with their congregations. Unfortunately, in the past, the health message, as shared here in Central America, was received as more of a bludgeon than a blessing. Many have rejected the message of health offered in Genesis chapters 1 and 2; they look at those who share this message with distrust or disdain. However, we are given more grace because Glenda and I are foreigners. The response to our talks has been positive. It has allowed us to make alliances with others who feel moved by the Holy Spirit to spread the gospel using the health message. We see God developing a team of medical missionaries.

This brings us to the most ambitious goal for the new year. We need to have a training venue to capacitate medical missionaries-in-training. God has already gifted us a beautiful property with 60 acres of land and a river running through it. We live on the property in a tiny one-room house with the bare essentials. The vision we see and wish to share with our supporters is a home that will provide for our basic needs and double as a training center for preparing inspired people to return to their congregations with life-saving knowledge. We and our team would teach courses on long weekends, an intense immersion. This knowledge will include vital health principles and how to connect those principles to the gospel, a winning combination for enlarging God's kingdom. A budding team to undergo this vision is already in development.

We hope you are as excited as we are about how God is moving our ministry. By God's providence and your continued support, we strive to better prepare those of Central America for Christ's soon return. We know this is a big dream, please feel welcome to contact us with any interest, questions, etc.
