

WINGS OF HOPE, TAKE FLIGHT AGAIN

By Mark Cabural, Adventist World Aviation-Philippines

To everyone supporting our mission here on the island of Palawan, Philippines, we are glad to inform you that our flight operations will resume soon. After almost 3 years of waiting for someone to fly our Cessna 182, God has finally sent us a competent, mission-minded pilot willing to serve with Adventist World Aviation.

In the aviation industry, men and women who are willing to take part in this mission can be counted on just our fingers. Being a professional in the aviation industry is viewed as a luxury by others, as it is one of the high-paying jobs. Choosing to work in an aviation organization that operates humanitarian flights, rather than at a well-paying airline or business aviation company, is quite a commitment.

I'm also thrilled to hear that, in 2025, our management announced that a young pilot would come on board to serve in the mission field. As a youth who completed an aircraft maintenance course at my college, I was glad to learn that the pilot I'm teaming up with is also young. We are so excited to be back flying again, bringing people access to good health care and the love that Jesus wants us to extend to others.

As an aircraft mechanic stationed here in our mission base, it is a blessing to have our Pathfinder plane soon to soar in the skies again. I'm sure that our previous clients will also be excited to know that we will be serving them again. Also, thanks to the Civil Aviation Authority of the Philippines for granting us another permit to fly and conduct humanitarian flights in the country. We are hoping and always praying that you will continue to give your support in prayer, manpower, and finances to keep this mission in the Philippines running.
